1996 Bughouse Square Debates

Saturday, July 27, 1996
Noon to 5 p.m.

Entertainment
Noon to 1:30 p.m.
Bughouse Square poetry by La Freem Keith Ramsey
Folk music by Wayne Howard
Poetry by Ed Two Rivers
Music by Jim "Jimmy T" Tomasello
Bughouse music by Allan Schwartz

Soapbox Sessions
1:30 to 2:45 p.m.

Soapbox 1

Does American Law Service Well?
Peter Baugher
Lawyer, Schopf and Weiss

Politics: A Rustbelt Industry?
Michael Silverstein
Samuel N. Harper Professor of Anthropology, University of Chicago

How the Media Kills the Poor
Steve Sewall
Chicago Civic Media Project

Soapbox 2

Corporate Menace to Healthcare
Quentin Young
Chair, Health and Medicine Political Research Group

The Real Population Problem:
Christopher Check
Executive Vice President, The Rockford Institute

To Be Announced:
Eugene Pincham
Retired Illinois Appellate Court Justice

Soapbox 3

The Trouble with Republicans
Jacob Weisberg
Political Columnist, New York Magazine, and native Chicagoan
Plaque Dedication
2:45 pm
Please move to the west side of the park.

Dedication of Bughouse Square Plaque
Charles Cullen
President and Librarian, The Newberry Library
Cindy Mitchell
Mayor of Bughouse Square

Main Debate
3:15 pm
Dole: Do we Deserve him?
Who Should Lead the Country?
Jacky Grimshaw
Center for Neighborhood Technologies and Political Activist vs.
Joe Morris
Lincoln Legal Foundation

The History of Bughouse Square
by Cindy Mitchell, Mayor of Bughouse Square

Chicago’s famed Bughouse Square has a history dating back to the early 1840s. In 1840, the land now occupied by Washington Square Park was the neighborhood cow pasture. Residents of the area brought their cows here early in the morning, retrieving them in the evening and taking time to chat around the communal well. In 1842, Enosius Bushnell bought a large tract of land, including this area, for a housing development. He donated the square to the city as its second public park. The neighborhood quickly became a desirable location and the new park was surrounded by lovely mansions and row houses.

This era was short-lived, however. By 1910, the area began to attract a “bohemian element” and the mansions were soon converted to rooming houses. By 1915, the park became the premier forum for the freedom of speech in Chicago. The famous, infamous, and fanatical came daily to the park to mount the soapboxes and try to convert whoever would listen to any of a myriad of political and philosophical theories. Emma Goodman, Ben Heine, and Clarence Darrow were only some of the well-known personages who entertained the crowd. But the favorites were often the lesser known but equally convincing silver-tongued orators, such as “One Armed Charlie” who quoted the Constitution by heart, or the “Bulgarian General,” the self-proclaimed world expert on Russian military strategy. Throughout the summer evenings, up till the 1950s, the great and the amateurs filled the park in celebration of the freedom of speech. Now Bughouse Square is only a memory, celebrated yearly by the Newberry Library’s annual Bughouse Square Debates. The Newberry invites Chicago notables and everyone interested in today’s pressing issues for spirited debate in Washington Square Park.

Our sincere thanks to the 1996 Bughouse Square Committee:
Diane Citar, Chair
Leon Despres
Keith Goetsch
Tom Joyce
Cindy Mitchell
Terry Sullivan
Lila Weinberg

The John Nuveen Company

MACLEAN-FOGG
With support from:
The Playboy Foundation
Mayor’s Office of Special Events